Primary myelofibrosis is a rare, clonal disorder associated with a variety of extramedullary hematopoietic diseases. When these patients develop peripheral and splenic lesions, they are often placed on chronic transfusion therapy. This article presents the case of a patient with primary myelofibrosis who developed hepatitis B virus infection following vaccination. The patient's course was complicated by refractory thrombocytopenia and hepatopathy. This case demonstrates that physicians should be vigilant for the development of reactivated hepatitis B virus in patients with primary myelofibrosis who have received long-term transfusion therapy. Physicians should be cognizant of the need for booster vaccinations to prevent the development of hepatitis B virus infection in these patients.YOUR CART Hello and welcome to my website. My name is Ruben Beltran. I am an artist and a fine artist living and working in Florence, Italy. I am currently studying art on a Ph.D. I am an abstract painter, living in Florence for over twenty years. I work exclusively with brush on canvas. I have spent much of my life living and working in Florence and have a very strong attachment to the place. I do my best to transform the many sights and scents of the Tuscan countryside and the beautiful city of Florence into my art.Grace Bistro Review Introduction Did you know there was a Canadian restaurant in which you could actually cook?
